Glossary

Angel's Share: During the process of aging whiskey and due to the porous nature of wood barrels, a small percentage (roughly 2%) of every barreled whiskey batch is lost. Traditionally, it was believed that this whiskey evaporated up to the heavens and, thus, it was coined the "Angel's Share."

Bottled-in-Bond - Exclusive to the U.S. classification of spirits aged and bottled according to the regulations by the Bottled-in-Bond Act of 1897. It must be distilled by a single distiller in a single American distillery within the course of a single year. Then, it must also go through a four-year aging process under government supervision in a federally-bonded facility. Finally, it must be bottled at 100-proof – or 50% alcohol by volume.

Cask Strength - Also referred to as "barrel proof," cask strength refers to whiskies that are bottled straight out of the barrel. Cask strength spirits have no water added and generally range from 60 to 65 percent ABV – which translates to around 125 proof.

Bourbon: A charred oak barrel-aged distilled spirit first invented in the U.S. in the late 1700s that must contain a mash of at least 51% corn, alongside malt and rye.

Distillation: one of the larger processes in the creation of whiskey – including removing the alcohol created during fermentation from the wash, resulting in a concentrated liquid that will go on to be matured into a final spirit.

Finish - two ways for this term to be used one way refers to the flavors that come specifically after you've swallowed the whiskey AKA aftertaste. "Finishing" is a part of the secondary aging process-- the spirit is removed from one barrel or cask of a particular origin and moved to another of a different origin

Neat: a drink consisting of no mixer, poured straight from the bottle into the glass

Oak: an acorn bearing tree and the primary source of lumber used in the creation of whiskey barrels and casks.

Proof: an alternative measurement of alcoholic content of a given beverage, defined as twice the ABV measurement. For example, a 100-proof spirit contains 50% alcohol.

Rye: a cereal grain related to barley and wheat. A "Rye" whiskey is one whose mash bill is comprised primarily of rye grains. The higher the rye content the spicier the whiskey.

Single Barrel: a premium category of whiskey in which each individual bottle comprised exclusively of an aged spirit from a solitary wood barrel or cask.

Small batch: whiskey is whiskey produced by mixing the contents of a relatively small number of selected barrels. Small batch whiskeys are commercially positioned for the upper-premium market.

Sour Mash: a term that refers to a mixture of crushed malt and grain meal that's steeped in hot water. Most commonly used in the creation of bourbon and Tennessee whiskey which requires that a small amount of already used mash be returned into the following batch--similar to a sourdough starter.

Straight: refers to a spirit distilled from cereal grain mash to a concentrate that does not exceed 80% ABV and is aged in charred oak barrels for at least 2 years

Whiskey: a distilled alcoholic beverage made from fermented grain mash. This particular regional spelling, which originated in Ireland is used commonly to denote spirits from Ireland, the US and various other locales.

Whisky: this particular spelling, which originated in Scotland is commonly used to denote spirits from Scotland, Japan, Canada, and various other locales.
